

Policing and our environment

Chief Constable Olivia Pinkney
Hampshire Constabulary

Five Questions to Consider

1. Do we understand how our environmental approach can influence whether people join or stay within policing?

2. Is policing ready if reducing our environmental footprint becomes a requirement for the public sector?

3. Do we really understand the link between environmental benefit and cost saving?

4. What have we learned during COVID-19? What will we keep, and what more can we do?

5. A centralised approach, or enabling innovation and local ownership?

A frontline perspective on how policing can make environmental change

DC Vicky Brackstone (and former environmental engineer!)

In summary

Our staff and officers expect us to care

The next generation have it even higher up their agenda

Reducing our footprint could become mandatory – are we ready?

Have a strategy, and make sure people know it is important

Be careful with grandiose promises

Focus on basics and empowering people (like Vicky) to drive change

Above all, get involved!

